After years of service, the 1960's classrooms in Buildings C & D were in desperate need of refurbishment. The architects devised a scheme to extend the classrooms by the use of bay windows extending into the corridors. A prototype was trialled and then Coleman & Fairburn successfully tendered to carry out the refurbishment of Buildings C & D .

The work involved the complete strip-out of the old classrooms, rewiring the rooms, installation of new corridor walls, recarpetting, installation of pinboards and acoustic ceiling panels.

When completed the classrooms bore little resemblance to the classrooms left over from an earlier era.
