Thomas Hassall was known as the 'galloping parson'. Coleman & Fairburn are proud to be part of Stage I and the new beginnings of this college. This rural property contained an old house and a large shed. The house was converted to provide administration offices and a temporary canteen for the new school. Two separate new school buildings were constructed. One building contained the general learning classrooms, amenities, and library and the other building contained science classrooms. New play areas were formed along with car parking, landscaping, tree planting, and boundary fencing.
