

APS Chemicals had just acquired the licence to manufacture Napisan for the Australian market and had a problem. The current manufacturer was closing its Australian plant in nine months and could only stockpile approx two months supply of Napisan whilst APS prepared existing building and relocated the manufacturing equipment from the Central Coast.

Coleman & Fairburn was pleased to be able to organise the design, documentation and approval of the necessary building extensions and alterations. Using a 'partnering' approach to the problem, Coleman & Fairburn was able to complete the necessary building works and help facilitate the relocation of the plant with about one month to spare.
